SPECIAL EVENT : MAMMALIAN JAMBOREE DAY 10.09.2024

Mammals are brilliant at giving their young training and protection. Unlike lizards and snakes who abandon their eggs as soon as they have been laid, mammals stick around and help their young survive and learn how to find food and shelter. A great example of this is one of the most cooperative mammals on earth - the meerkat. They teach their young how to protect themselves from being injured by their main source of food, scorpions. The parents will firstly bring their young a dead scorpion to show them how to eat it, then an injured one and then an alive one, so they can learn the best technique to eat it while dodging the deadly tail!
