The upper primary wing students were engaged in cooking without fire activity which was conducted to promote the development of life skills from an early age. The activity was also intended to create interest in culinary skills that will help them in the future.

During the session, our little munchkins learned some basic cooking skills under the guidance of their respective teachers. The little ones turned into young chefs and prepared healthy and nutritious food that is good for the mind and body. They made delicious snacks like dry fruits mixture laddoo, chocolate laddoos, and oreo shake. The young chefs enjoyed their time learning how to make tasty desserts.

The main objective behind conducting this activity was to introduce some basic life skills in form of the fireless cooking activity and to involve them in an enriching sensory experience by introducing them to a variety of healthy food. They practiced food preparation skills and identified their preferences on food.

Life skills like cooking come quite handy as one grows and begins their journey of life. At SAN we pay a lot of attention to life skills and encourage our children to do basic chores on their own from the very beginning; it makes them self-dependent and responsible from an early age and adds up to their personality which ultimately impacts their way of life.
